Sierra Lake Preserves Bodies of Bomber Crew

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The bodies of a World War II bomber crew for 17 years, according to a San Francisco newspaper who visited the scene accompanied by a San Mateo skin diver.

Fred Goerner of radio station KCBS said the bodies of the crew of a B-24 which crashed into the Black Divide Mountain range were broken and mutilated by the crash, but apparently perfectly preserved. Mr. Goerner made the expedition under the joint sponsorship of KCBS and the San Mateo Times.

Intact
He said the skindiver, Bob Fischer, reported that the fuselage of the aircraft was still intact although badly smashed by the impact. "The plane looked like it crashed yesterday," Mr. Goerner reported. "The cold waters kept the paint shiny and new and free from rust." The bodies were better preserved than any embalming process could have done," he said.

Part of the instrument panel brought out by Mr. Goerner and Mr. Fischer showed the bomber had been delivered to the Army Air Forces on June 23, 1943, less than six months before the crash.

A serious navigation error apparently contributed to the crash, Mr. Goerner said. The bomber appeared to be traveling northeast, away from its Fresno base when it struck the mountain, he said. The plane was returning to Fresno from a training flight to Tucson, Ariz.

"The airplane struck about 200 feet below the highest point of the Black Divide Range," Mr. Goerner said. "It bounced once after the impact then tumbled end over end a quarter to half a mile, skidded across the ice on the lake and smashed into a large rock. The plane is believed to have crashed in a severe winter mountain storm while on a training flight. This storm may have affected its compass, Mr. Goerner said.

Trek
Mr. Goerner and Mr. Fischer packed about 50 pounds of skin-diving gear into the mountains from Bishop. The trek took them about nine hours on horseback and six hours on foot. They explored the impact site and followed the bomber's trail down the mountain slope.

Meanwhile, a three-man military search team today began an attempt to search the wreckage of the B-24. The team was to be flown by Air Force helicopter to the ranger station at Little Pete Meadow near the scene of the crash.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Park Service has recommended federal and local governments acquire at least 15 percent of the nation's ocean and inland shoreline for recreational purposes.

The agency said this amount of land would be required to meet the needs of the expanding population in the next 40 years. About 6.5 percent of the Atlantic and Gulf Coast shoreline currently is set aside for recreation.

The Park Service made the recommendation in response to a request for a study of the matter from Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.), chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Water Resources.

Recent trends indicate a rapidly increasing interest and participation in water recreation activities, especially in swimming, boating, water skiing, skin diving, and in the enjoyment of water fowl and other aquatic life," the Park Service said.

Overcrowded
It said present water recreation facilities were overcrowded and inadequate for the growing population.

The Park Service, a part of the Department of Interior, advised the committee that progress in meeting the nation's recreation needs required federal recognition of the problem, plus overhauling of many state water laws.

The agency urged the government to establish a new water resources policy that would leave some streams in their natural state.

It cited the Allagash River in Maine, the Current and Eleven Point Rivers in Missouri, and the Rogue River in Oregon. It said these streams should be preserved from the increasing "water control onslaught."

Potential
The Interior Department said it should be given authority to determine the recreational potential of all future federal reservoirs. To carry this out, it recommended that Congress take into consideration recreational benefits in constructions of dams and that these costs be assessed on a non-reimbursable basis.

The department also asked authority to build dams with recreation as their primary purpose. It recommended that such developments be limited to 2,500 surface acres.

Vatican Calls Volunteers for Latin America
VATICAN CITY (AP)—The Vatican is planning to organize a peaceful international army of lay "papal volunteers" to help Latin American bishops in their religious tasks.

Under the plan, lay Catholics from the United States and Europe will travel to Latin America to cooperate with the local bishops against the "dangers menacing the heritage of faith and religious culture."

Pope John XXIII and his predecessor Pius XII repeatedly pointed out the big religious problems posed by the rapid development of Latin America, by continued poverty in some areas of the continent and by a scarcity of priests.

The lay aides, who will be known as "papal volunteers for Latin America," will work under the local bishops and collaborate with local Catholic organizations.

Spadework for such an organization is already underway in the United States. The bishops of Italy, Germany, France, Belgium, Holland and Switzerland have also been contacted by the Papal Commission on Latin America to see how they can help in the work.

Y Schedules Meetings to Discuss Camps
The Ventura County YMCA will hold two meetings for teen-age boys next week to outline Y camping activities for August.

A meeting will be held at the Oxnard Y Center at Hill and H streets Tuesday at 7 p.m. and another the following night at the same time at the county headquarters in Ventura, 5200 Telegraph road.

Included in the August schedule are a "workrecreation" camp at Pine Valley Camp Aug. 15-19; a back-pack trip for high school boys into the High Sierras in late August, and a truck caravan for junior high boys in the High Sierras Aug. 20-27.

Gymnastic classes at Ventura College and other local activities will be discussed by the new Y secretary, Jerry Nelson.

Registration for the camp sessions should be made at county headquarters.
